Wagga's old home of rugby league

The old Wagga Leagues Club and Eric Weissel Oval in all its former glory will probably ring a bell with the older generation of Wagga’s football fanatics. Situated on the corner of Gurwood and Shaw Streets, it is now the site of an independent K-12 Catholic school. But many people do not know it was once the heartland of rugby league in Wagga.

Founded officially in July 1933, the Wagga Leagues Club was created by a group of three men obsessed with rugby league. Mr Joe Rake, his younger brother Bob Rake, and Mr Jack Murphy were working on foundations for Mr Rake's house during the 1934 football season. When Joe Rake mentioned a Rugby League club in Wagga, the idea of a club should be established. Murphy jumped at the opportunity and the very next day searched Wagga to find a possible site.

According to Patrick G Byrnes’ Remember the 1930s, 60s and 70s in Wagga Wagga, Murphy considered an old bootmaker's shed in Blake St; however, it was at an unsuitable price. He then learned of eight-and-a-half acres of land on the corner of Gurwood and Shaw streets. It was owned by the Wagga War Services Home Commission and was originally used for constructing homes for returned servicemen. On the other hand, after the floods in the 1950s, the committee saw that the area was unsuitable for housing and so granted permission for the site to be purchased.

Sponsored by the newly formed Wagga Magpies Rugby League Club in 1933, the club purchased the site from the War Services Home Commission, and with 14 founding members, began to work on plans for the building and sporting complex. Many volunteers from Wagga came to assist, which helped reduce the cost of the initial building.

In March 1936, the Leagues Club was opened as a temporary building. Its popularity began rapidly increasing and there was a very long waiting list for membership. Future plans were rapidly set in motion for a football oval, bowling greens, lawns, and hard tennis courts.

By 1939, Murphy had become the president and the club boasted a membership of 1000 people. That year, the tennis courts and long-awaited oval, seating 10,000 people, were established. Interestingly, The Daily Advertiser published on September 23, 1939, wrote that the “(en)no” courts were in such demand, that a further two courts had to be added”, to the original two that had already been installed.

Sherry Morris’ book A History of Wagga Wagga notes the Leagues Club hosted one of the Riverina’s most outstanding players, Mr Eric Weissel, by naming the oval after him. Eric Weissel had lived in Wagga since 1938 and had captured the hearts of rugby league fans across the country. He was offered positions from Sydney and English clubs; however, he never left the bush, preferring to play for a string of Riverina clubs during a career that spanned 18 seasons, including the Wagga Magpies from 1938 to 1956. Unfortunately, the latter part of his life remains a mystery as the only records of him in the archives are his Masonic Gavel and Jewel presented to him in 1955 and his death notice in the paper from 1973.

From the state of the oval today, many people who walk or drive past would not realize a 1985 to 1988 Rugby League World Cup match was held at the oval on July 28, 1988. Played between the victorious Australians and Papua New Guineans, two records were set. First, a crowd of 11,685 people showed up to watch the game, and second, the score was 70-3.

During the next few years, a new, modern Leagues Club building was constructed, and then a second storey was added in 1984. Arthur Simmons, the famous Australian rugby league and union five-eighth, took over as secretary manager after he finished his club career at the Wagga Magpies (1965-7). He remained in that position until 1994. Today not many people would truly know the importance of the old Leagues Club and Eric Weissel Oval to Wagga’s football heritage. Joe Rake’s dream of a rugby league clubhouse in 1934 not only turned into the centre of football for the area but it became an extremely popular social centre for Wagga and its community.
