- 11.3 The reference to Head of Campus should only be used in relation to communications relevant to that role. In all other cases, the officer should use their substantive position title.
- 11.4 Where an officer is Head of Campus for more than one campus, it is generally NOT appropriate to refer to both campuses in communications. The appropriate reference to be used will depend on the particular campus to which the communication relates.
- 11.5 In general descriptive communications (for example on a web site), where a Head of Campus holds another office within the University (eg. Director, Centre for Indigenous Studies) it is appropriate to refer to the substantive title first followed by the Head of Campus title, for example:
Director, Centre for Indigenous Studies and Head of Campus, Dubbo
- 11.6 When referring to a Head of Campus, it is not appropriate to use the term "Head" or any other shortened version of the title.

or

To: Mr John Smith, Operations Officer, CSU Study Centre in Sydney

15. REFERENCE TO CSU ACRONYM

- 15.1 It is important in all public communications to reinforce that we are a 'University'. While the acronym 'CSU' is often used in communications, it is not commonly understood in the general community, particularly among new constituencies and stakeholders.
- 15.2 In general, public materials such as reports, official correspondence, web sites and other public documents should always make reference to the full name of the University – 'Charles Sturt University'.
- 15.3 Where repeated reference to Charles Sturt University disrupts the flow of the document or is not appropriate, preference should be given to use of the words 'the University' in subsequent references (once the context of the reference is established).
- 15.4 Use of the words 'Charles Sturt', without reference to 'University', should be avoided in public communications.
- 15.5 Use of the acronym 'CSU' is appropriate for internal documents, documents intended for distribution within the higher education sector or where the use of acronyms is well understood (eg. for undergraduate student marketing materials or marketing media). Where the acronym 'CSU' is used in a document, it must be clear at the beginning of the document what the acronym means.
- 15.6 In providing quotes for media releases or other corporate publications, reference should always be made to 'Charles Sturt University' or 'the University' in the quote (references to 'CSU' may be contained in the connecting narrative). Use of the acronym 'CSU' in quotes should be avoided as the quote may be disconnected from surrounding text when used by the media or other publisher and the reference may be lost.

- 16.1 The University Style Manual sets out the stylistic approach staff should use in formatting the content and layout of communications to ensure consistency.

16.2 Staff should follow the requirements set out in the University Style Manual in addition to this Guideline.
