

The role of the National Library of Australia in the national research infrastructure

Tony Boston

National Library of Australia

Abstract

The National Library of Australia plays a significant role in Australian research through: the provision of services and infrastructure to support research and scholarship in Australia; its leadership role in the Australian library sector; and by undertaking research to develop content for its services. This presentation will provide a broad overview of the National Library's contribution to research, a snapshot of how this is achieved through development of innovative programs and services, and will discuss future initiatives in the context of the Library's strategic directions statement for 2006-2008.

