Enrolment Pattern

There is no set enrolment pattern in the course, as the enrolment pattern in the course, similar to the subjects studied and for the same reasons, is flexible. That flexibility will allow for course participant, organisational, and subject scheduling needs. An enrolment pattern and subjects undertaken in the program will be negotiated for each individual cohort following discussions between the requesting organisation for the diploma and the Course Coordinator.

A generic enrolment pattern includes: -

Pre-residential subject/s.

Either core or elective subject/s, dependent on organisational requirements, and session of admission. Studied by distance education, in conjunction with the regular distance education offerings of that subject to Bachelor of Policing students consisting of Australian and International police.

Residential School.

A minimum of two subjects consisting of either core or elective offerings for the program, delivered in a residential setting.

Post residential school subject/s.

Either core or elective subject/s, dependent on organisational requirements, and session of admission. Studied by distance education, in conjunction with the regular distance education offerings of that subject to Bachelor of Policing students consisting of Australian and International police.

Residential School

Please note that the following subjects may have a residential school component.
