

Charles Sturt University Science@CSU Roadshow

The Faculty of Science at Charles Sturt University (CSU) is one of the largest and most diverse science faculties in Australasia.

Over recent years we have directed enormous growth in research and teaching programs, substantial building projects and exciting new collaborations. Today, the Faculty of Science at CSU has around 9,000 students and hundreds of staff in seven schools across six campuses. We teach and conduct research in a huge variety of science and health disciplines from Veterinary Science to Dentistry, Nursing to Environmental Studies, Forensic Biotechnology to Wine Science, Agriculture to Allied Health, and more.

Charles Sturt University invites you to join us for a short presentation delivered by the Dean of Science, Professor Nick Klomp. Nick will present a summary of some of the exciting initiatives currently planned or being implemented in the various science disciplines at CSU. Many of you will know Nick as the regular science correspondent for ABC Radio across NSW and will be aware of his passion for all things science.

The Roadshows are open to students, teachers, industry and the general public, and will provide information about courses leading to lifelong science careers, current and future research collaborations and professional training, in multi-million dollar research and training facilities on CSU campuses, new clinics opening on many campuses, and CSU's bid for a medical school. Be entertained and informed.
